Where to eat

CANTINA SICILIANA

Serves the best couscous in Trapani, and a killer busiate al pesto Trapanese (thick pasta made with basil, almonds and tomatoes). Choose from over 500 Sicilian wines, which you can also purchase from their shop next door.

SAPORI DI SOLE

Tuck into Sicilian specialities like caponata (sweet and sour aubergine), salted tuna and fresh seafood at this friendly eatery in the centre of Marsala. Chef Erica makes a mean limoncello, and there's plenty of Marsala wine for polishing off a meal in true local fashion.

6 VIA CATURCA, MARSALA, TEL: +39 0923 762415

into their homemade olive oil with a liberal sprinkling of the coarse crystals.

Guests gather each night in the dining room for home-cooked meals, which include calamari marinated in Marsala and stuffed with pine nuts, currants and pecorino cheese. Marisin explains the nifty way the locals land their catch. "The calamari are attracted to the light, so the fishermen use flashing bulbs on their lines to get them to the surface," she says.

Traditions are never far away in these parts, and neither is nature. The most popular swimming spot in Scopello is down by the old tuna fishery, where parts of Hollywood crime caper Ocean's Twelve were shot. It's part of the Zingaro nature reserve, boasting hidden coves for snorkling and a cornucopia of plants and wildlife. ➤
